A Romance with a Tragic Ending. [Chattanooga Times.]

We learn from reliable sources of a dreadful affair, which has occurred on Walden's ridge, near Mabbitt's springs, about seven miles distant from this city. For months past a white man, living on the ridge, has been paying court to a woman, who also received attentions from another resident in that quarter. The latter gentleman was the more fortunate, and a f-w days ago they married, to the great discomfiture of his rival. He was seen moping about the most unpleasant frame of mind, and it is supposed that he at length concluded that life was not worth living for, if he could not get the woman of his choice.

clump of bushes. His gun was lying by his side. Numerous gun shot wounds were visible about his head and breast. His eyes were picked out by birds, and his entire body in the last stage of decomposition. The body was given a decent burial by the mountaineers. No foul play is suspected, and no further investigation of the cause of his death will be made.
